THE NORTHWEST — its many faces and places — means different things to different people, and nowhere is this more evident than in the Northwest Magazine Photo Contest, which ended earlier this month.

A panel of judges selected monthly winners for September, then chose the three grand prize winners. All first- and second-place winners from the six monthly contests were considered in the grand prize judging. Announcement of winners was made at an awards luncheon October 8 at the Benson Hotel.

Milt Johnson of Portland, who had won first place in black-and-white in July, garnered first prize in color for September for his pho-
